Subject: Commitment to Targets

Dear IESO,

I have followed much of the proceedings through more actively involved friends or colleagues. I have looked at your proposed scenarios. I generally get the impression that the exercise is looking at the implications of pursuing and phasing out of Natural Gas generation using three different approaches. However, I do not get the impression that IESO has accepted the Federal government's setting of the net zero emissions by 2050 as an existential issue.

In my view, as long as this is seen as a general pursuit of options that would be nice to achieve, then we will not get the serious treatment by society of developing a clear pathway to net zero. Also, the IESO plan that shows expanded use of natural gas over the coming years, certainly indicates that they are not truly serious about the objective.

Could you provide me with any documentation that indicates that IESO truly understands the net zero commitment.

Best regards,
